

Washington, DC — Today Congressman Earl Blumenauer (D-Ore.) announced legislation on Iraq, calling for the withdrawal of US forces, accountability for how federal funds are being spent, and enhanced diplomatic efforts. The legislation, titled the “New Direction for Iraq Act of 2007,” requires the redeployment of U.S. troops from Iraq, a new diplomatic offensive to stabilize Iraq, aggressive efforts at oversight and accountability, and a new approach towards reconstructing Iraq.

“For too long Congress has been a willing enabler of the President’s war,” said Blumenauer. “Now is not the time for the President to repeat his mistakes or those of Johnson and Nixon before him. This legislation demands accountability and sets a new direction for Iraq.”

Congressman Blumenauer has actively opposed the war in Iraq from the beginning. He fought against the resolution authorizing the President to lead the country to war, and campaigned against the Bush policies in 20 states over the last two years. Congressman Blumenauer also advocated a plan for withdrawal over a year ago when he introduced legislation to begin bringing the National Guard home.

The “New Direction for Iraq Act of 2007” offers a comprehensive approach to a new policy for Iraq and can be summarized as follows:

- Sets out the goals of U.S. policy as supporting the Iraqi people, preventing greater violence, re-establishing U.S. international credibility and military readiness, and refocusing on real national security threats.
- Prohibits permanent U.S. military bases in Iraq, as well as U.S. control over Iraq’s oil infrastructure and economic policies.
